Rebel Army of North Bursts Into Mighty Offensive Against Catalonia

STRONG PRESSURE

Three More Loyalist Airplanes Destroyed, and Two Damaged

MADRID, Feb. 19.—The rebel army of the north burst into a mighty offensive against Catalonia today while 20,000 insurgent troops, according to loyalist reports, were rushed up from the south in a desperate effort to break the deadlock on the Jarama front, just southeast of Madrid.

They admitted pushing in a communique saying: "The insurgents are bringing strong pressure on the Aragon front."

While awaiting reinforcements for the siege of Madrid, the rebels pursued relentless aerial warfare around the capital.

Ten government planes were brought down in an aerial attack by gunfire around Madrid, it was announced at Salamanca.

Three more loyalist airplanes were destroyed and two were damaged in a rebel air raid on the Aragon front, Salamanca said. Loyalists claimed seven rebel planes were shot down around Madrid in the last ten days.

Telling of the large rebel reinforcements being moved up to Jarama battlefields, the loyalist Spanish press agents said: "Fighting on the Jarama river front is the most severe since the war began."

ROCK GARDENS FEATURE IN ILLUSTRATED TALK

Miss Ann B. Werstner Gives Address at Trevoze Horticultural Meeting

MISS VAUGHN PRESIDES

TREVOZE, Feb. 19.—Miss Ann B. Werstner, field secretary of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society, delivered an illustrated talk before members of the Trevoze Horticultural Society in the community house this week.

Wall and rock gardens were featured. Showing a picture of a rock garden, started in Europe in 1542, Miss Werstner told that two types of stone can be used in the construction of the gardens, the one granite and the other limestone. Field boulders, may also be used, but they must be firmly embedded and at the same time as much rock as possible must show above the surface.

Miss Werstner stressed the use of phlox, of which there are two kinds, one of which blooms early in the season and the other later. She warned against the use of the petunia in the rock garden because eventually it will choke out all other plants. The introduction of water into the rock garden was advocated by Miss Werstner, who said that if a natural supply cannot be found, artificial means should be taken for its supply. The rock garden, it was said, needs only a moderately rich soil.

A great many of the pictures shown by the guest speaker were taken in Switzerland, where the finest rock gardens in the world are to be found. The success of the rock gardens in Switzerland, it was stated by the guest speaker, is due largely to the large abundance of running water. The abundance of the water results in a very quick and luxurious growth of the plants.

Some of the pictures shown were taken in the garden of Henri Corvonn, who is very well known in the United States for his rock garden plants. His gardens are located about three miles from Geneva. Other pictures showed the Tudor home with its rock gardens in natural settings. Miss Werstner also showed a Paris garden with its wooded walk. The picture of the Alpine meadows with the mountains in the background were also admired.

Miss Werstner showed a number of unusual plants which had been sent to her from Florida by Mrs. William Sealey, Langhorne, a member of the society.

Announcement was made during the brief business session, which was in charge of Miss Helen Vaughn, Bryn Athyn, one of the vice presidents, that the flower show in Philadelphia will start on March 5th and will be brought to a conclusion on March 14.

CONSIDER ZONING AND BUILDING ORDINANCES

Doylestown Council To Invite Zoning Specialist To Meeting

TREASURER'S REPORT

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 19.—It is expected by Doylestown borough officials that during this year Doylestown may secure zoning and building ordinances.

The finance committee of Council has set aside an item of $1500 on the 1937 budget for zoning and town planning, and to get the thing started, a well-known zoning engineer is being invited to attend the March meeting of Council to discuss the proposition with members of Council.

David Knickerbocker Boyd, who gave Philadelphia its zoning and planning, and who is now engaged in similar work in connection with the World's Fair plans in New York City, and who recently spoke to the Rotary Club of Doylestown, will be invited to the next meeting of Council.

Council members expressed the opinion that they "thought it would be fine to have a round table conference with some expert on zoning and building ordinances." They were of the opinion that similar efforts made some time ago by Council concerning a building ordinance were "entirely too strict and were not practical for Doylestown." Council members also said that former plans have been "too expensive."

The monthly report of Chief of Police James Welsh showed 66 warnings, 5 arrests, 1 prisoner discharged with a reprimand, one sentenced to Bucks County Prison, 3 cases pending and 56 "overnight guests" given shelter.

The report of Borough Treasurer Mann was read by Councilman George F. Smith, showing a balance of $2246.92. Receipts during the past month amounted to $5062.77 and expenditures $2815.85. Bonds outstanding amount to $113,500, notes in bank, $11,500, or a total indebtedness of $125,000. Among the following items: Delinquent borough tax, 1936, $798.75; curbs and gutters, $401.85; delinquent water rent, $299.02; sewer rent, January, 1936, $58.25; delinquent sewer rent, $262.50.

Council passed a motion authorizing the proper execution of additional WPA contracts for more pavement and gutter improvement work in Doylestown. About $1400 out of the total of $3226 bill for new pavements built under WPA aid, is still outstanding, it was reported.

Council also authorized the delinquent tax duplicate for 1936, amounting to $7073.70 be placed in the hands of High Constable Scott Case for collection, with the penalty of five per cent.

After discussing streets and pavements, Council members were of the opinion that many Doylestown pavements are in a dangerous condition. The streets, according to surveys, are in excellent condition compared to streets in towns of similar size.

Council has not asked property owners to repair dangerous pavements during the past two years because of business conditions in general, but unless many pavements in the town are fixed this Spring some action will have to be taken.

Council authorized the clerk to notify two local property owners to repair dangerous paying conditions at once.

The statements of finances for Doylestown borough for 1936 was officially submitted to Council. It showed that $10,582.19 was the balance turned over to the borough by the water department in 1936.

COSTS DIVIDED IN CASE INVOLVING TREVOZE WRANGLE

Woman Was Charged With Aggravated Assault and Battery

MAN IS PROSECUTOR

Fate of Arazino Maniero, Charged With Arson, Will Rest With Jury Today

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 19.—President Judge Hiram H. Keller yesterday told a jury that he would have done exactly the same thing as they did if he had been a member of the jury that acquitted Mrs. Alice Cameron, of Trevoze, of aggravated assault and battery and assault and battery, and directed that the costs be divided between the prosecutor and the defendant.

The prosecutor was Thomas L. Barker, who appeared in court earlier this term as a defendant charged with surety of the peace after he had shot rats and thrown them over on Mrs. Cameron's property in Trevoze and yelled, "There's another dead Republican!"

"You have been in court enough this term," Judge Keller said to Barker as he sentenced him to pay one-half the costs. "The jury looked upon this case as a neighborhood wrangle and there had been enough of it; I have no fault to find with the verdict for I would have done the same thing."

Barker, the defendant charged, hit her with a cane, Mrs. Cameron said that she did strike Barker after he had struck her husband in an over-the-fence back-yard wrangle.

The case was one of the last to be heard at the February term of Bucks County Criminal Court.

The fate of Arazino Maniero, Philadelphia butcher, who owns a farm in Warwick Township, will probably rest with the jury this afternoon. Maniero, and also Antonio Gianniero, Philadelphia, are both charged with arson and conspiracy to commit arson. When the verdict is returned in the case of Maniero, Gianniero plans to plead guilty to his charge.

Maniero denied on the stand yesterday that he told Gianniero to burn the barn on Maniero's wife's farm on Dark Hollow Road, near Jamison. At the place Maniero conducts a goat farm. The farm in Warwick Township was purchased in 1931, for $500, it was testified.

Gianniero testified that he went to the Maniero farm on September 26th last, placed baskets and boxes in a heap in the barn, and set fire to them, burning the barn. "Maniero paid me $25 after I returned to Philadelphia, and told me to keep my mouth shut," Gianniero testified yesterday. Character witnesses for Maniero from Philadelphia, stated that he had a fine reputation. The defense was scheduled to open late this morning.

With the membership contest of Hulmeville-Middletown Parent-Teacher Association ending on Wednesday evening, it was decided that efforts put forth by the pupils of the first and second grades, and the efforts of the third and fourth grades were about equal. The pupils of these four grades will therefore be treated to ice cream and cake on Wednesday afternoon next at 2.30 o'clock. At Wednesday night's session of the P. T. A. the following agreed to serve the refreshments to the students: Mrs. Earl Phipps, Mrs. William Wheeler, Mrs. James Thompson, Mrs. William Hill, Mrs. Edwin Lathrop, Mrs. George Thorpe. Eleven of the mothers will donate cakes. Mrs. John R. Worrall presided at the session. It was reported that electric lights have been installed in the new basement of the school, the P. T. A. providing for same. Miss MacCorkle's students received the attendance banner for this month. A spelling bee was conducted by Lynn Schatzer, principal, chairman of the entertainment committee. Winners were Mrs. Hill and Mrs. Worrall.

The past few days were spent by Miss Lillian Gossline at the home of relatives in Bristol.

OUR NATIONAL RANGE

Perhaps we never made a greater mistake in policy than when we turned over the national range to homesteaders. No sooner did we do that than the price of beef began to go up.

When the homesteaders came in they began to plow up the buffalo grass that once carpeted the plains from the Rio Grande almost to the Canadian border.

One year out of five these homesteaders got some kind of crop. But it was not a region adapted to field farming. It was a country where the buffalo had roamed in immense herds, a country where cattle flourished—it was a range. The very name meant it was not possible to fence off the place and tame. The cattle needed to roam mile after mile. In that way the grass was preserved.

We did not appreciate the fact that Nature had made that land fit for just one thing. A hungry Homestead Lobby spread abroad reports of "cattle barons" who were occupying thousands of acres and keeping the poor farmers out. Poor farmers indeed! They have been poorer ever since they plowed up the range and attempted to do the impossible. Grass lands, they found by bitter experience, were neither corn nor wheat lands.

Had we left well enough alone the beef cattle would still be on that great range, and we would not be importing meat from Canada and the Argentine. Nor would we be compelled to extend charity to these homesteaders, who by their own folly have brought about the ruin of one of our great national resources.

NO WAY TO ACT

There are sad stories in some communities about the land of a dearth of collections at church and Sunday-school services. Probably it is but another reflection of the state of the times. Even so, we are not so badly off as the parish of Great Missenden, England, where the vicar was obliged to announce that he would no longer accede to requests "for the return of large silver pieces inadvertently put in the collection boxes in place of copper ones."

We find it difficult to understand how there could have been enough such mistakes to make the announcement necessary. A man might once in a dog's age drop a half crown into the box when he meant to give a tuppence. But the chances that he would do it twice or that such an extraordinary kind of mistake would become habitual with the congregation are as remote as breaking the bank at Monte Carlo.

Can it possibly be that certain sons of Belial in the parish have made claims to silver coins contributed by others when their own gifts were tuppence coppers? That would be a trick worthy of an Artful Dodger. And the flaw in the scheme is that it could be worked only once or twice in a parish. As a source of steady income it is precarious.

The extraordinary case of the offerings at Great Missenden is mysterious enough to interest one of the great detectives of current fiction.

A Nazi secret police official says his force depends largely on the "voluntary co-operation" of the loyal German people. Secret police always were that way.

All Babies of Community May Be Candidates

good fortune with chorales of blissful delight and reap a harvest from love-caused adulation.

The harvest will come when they grow old enough to use what they now reap, as intended by the friends and relatives who do the sowing.

Your votes for a baby now may clear for that baby a path to happiness. It may mean the difference between mere existence and actual living.

THESE CASH AMOUNTS WILL BE GIVEN THE CHILDREN'S PARENTS WHEN THE WINNERS ARE DECIDED.

Something New Under the Sun

They didn't have elections like this when adults of today were babies; business men did not organize together in such movements. This generation has made progress; it is upon this program that beneficiaries in this election will base their advances.

Hark knocks of experience were encountered by most of the successful adults of today to gain their laurels.

They never had a movement like this to pick them up on the threshold of maturity and provide them with means of assisting in gaining the business education which is daily becoming more necessary to success. These citizens in particular will appreciate the full virtue of this baby's election. The winning children will have a nest egg to look forward to and a good will send-off to look back on.

Will Inspire Thrift

This is an age of specialization; it will be even more pronounced for the oncoming generation. The first prize cash award of $500 will have grown in 18 years to nearly two and one-half times that amount; interest on the deposit will have accumulated and borne more interest. If this $500 deposit will have been supplemented by an additional deposit of only $1 (one dollar) each month thereafter, it will amount to $2,240.60 (twenty-two hundred forty dollars and sixty cents) at the end of 18 years. Likely, the account will have been further added to through the thrift it will have inspired. It will serve as the stepping-stone to knowledge which will make its owner proficient in the field of his or her choosing.

CROYDON

The Ladies Aid of Wilkinson Memorial Methodist Church held a regular meeting on Monday and decided to have a mock wedding in the basement of the church building Saturday night. Everybody is invited. There will be a silver offering at the door.

The regular monthly dance given at the firehouse was very enjoyable. Each man and woman received a comic Valentine. The hall is most attractive in its new decorations. The walls are painted colonial yellow with black trimmings. At the front of the hall a beautiful scene has been painted by the members. New lights and shade improve also. A platform was built with railing for use of the musicians.

On Monday next a George Washington party will be held.

At the skating rink a party was given by the young people of St. Luke's Lutheran Church. Friends from Trenton, Bristol and Philadelphia had a merry time.

"LUXURY MODEL" by MAY CHRISTIE

CHAPTER XXXIX

They had a long, lazy day on the beach, swimming, talking and picnicking. They ate the halibut and bass that Jasper caught, and discussed the merits of San Francisco and other places for living and working.

Nancy said: "The San Francisco people are so real. One makes solid friends in San Francisco. People that stand by you, and you know exactly where you stand with them. They're wonderful friends."

"They're so hospitable," Luana declared. "It's different elsewhere, although one is invited to loads of parties, and there's heaps of entertaining, it hasn't anything solid back of it. The only things that count are money and success."

At quarter of six they bade adieu to the cottage, and piled into the car.

Two hours later, at the apartment, with dinner on the table, the little maid was telling Nancy that a man who wouldn't leave his name had telephoned three times during the late afternoon, asking to speak with her.

"What sort of a voice had he, Kate?"

"Rough. Mumbling. It made me kind of nervous. He thought I was stalling, that you were really in the flat."

Nancy and Jasper looked at each other, the same appalling suspicion in their minds.

Could it . . . dare it . . . be Gerald Bruton, wanting news of their friend?

Twenty minutes later, the telephone rang again. Kate went to answer it. She came back and said it was the same man's voice.

Nancy went to the telephone, picked up the receiver. As she listened, her face went white as chalk; her hand shook.

"Jasper, it's he! It's Gerald Bruton!"

Her hand over the receiver, her lips trembling with apprehension, Nancy faced her husband in the little telephone alcove in the hall of the apartment.

"Good lord!"

"He says it's no good to say she isn't here, for he saw us come in just now—he saw her come in with us—he must be telephoning from the drug store on the corner, Jasper!"

"He wants her to talk with him on the telephone? Or to see her? Which?"

"Both. He says he has a claim on her, that she's married to him. His voice was so queer and thick, Jasper. I imagine he's been drinking."

"As long as he's seen her with us, I'll get Elizabeth to go on the 'phone. She'd better see what his game is. Then I'll get in touch with the police."

Nancy went back into the living-room for Luana, and a moment or two later the two girls returned.

Luana's face was deathly white as she stared at the receiver lying on its shelf in the hall.

"I can't—" she whispered, "Jasper, I can't talk to him. I'm—afraid."

"Nonsense!" He put his hand over the receiver. "Buck up! We're here with you. We're right by you. Find out what he wants."

With shaking hand she took the car-piece from him. "Hello."

She could hardly hear at first, his voice sounded so muffled. "Speak louder," she faltered.

In silence her friends watched her—heard her protest. "But I can't do it! I haven't got a thousand dollars! I haven't any money for you! It's impossible, I tell you!"

Another long silence, broken by a faint echo of the voice on the line. Jasper could stand her perturbation no longer. He interfered, putting his hand over the mouthpiece, so that Gerald Bruton might not hear him.

"What does he want?"

Luana's blue eyes were swimming in tears. "He—he insists that he needs a thousand dollars for his get-away, Jasper. I'm terrified, and—yet I think we should help him out. He asks me to meet him on the corner of Washington and Pierce street in a half hour from now, with the money."

"That'd be a criminal offense. The law is mighty hard on those who aid and abet felons," warned Jasper. "You got off once, but for the lord's sake don't get into worse trouble! I'll handle the situation. Nancy, take her back to the living-room. I'll see this thing through."

Swiftly, he hung up the receiver as the two girls moved away.

A moment later, he was asking the operator to connect him immediately with police headquarters.

"Get me Lieutenant-Detective Tim Murphy. This is his friend, Jasper Payne speaking. It's very urgent."

His party came on the 'phone, and assured him that in a few minutes he would be over.

Meantime, Gerald Bruton in his booth on the corner drug store was getting the "busy" sign. Again and again he tried to get the number, only to hear a loud, maddening buzzing on the line.

So she had dared to cut him off? She was calling the police? Five minutes later his suspicion was confirmed. For in the distance, getting louder and nearer every second, he heard the siren of a police car and leaped to his feet in the booth, so that the tell-tale light went out, leaving him in darkness.

The car whirled by the drug store and round the corner towards the Paynes' apartment building.

"The double-crossing—! I'll get her yet! I'll make her pay for this!" the fugitive muttered, as he slipped from the booth and out by a side door in the opposite direction.

The car whirled by the drug store and round the corner towards the Paynes' apartment building.

"Pardon me, Madame," said Lewis, "but Mr. Vandaveer's particular instructions were to take you to 66A East 56th Street. He said to tell you he'll be waiting you there, Madame."

Luana was mystified, but did not argue. She leaned back against the cushioned seat, her mind revolving the appalling happenings of last evening.

From the airport in San Francisco, Jasper had telephoned police headquarters to find out whether Lieutenant Murphy had returned?

The detective himself came to the telephone. "Say, that bird's a sharp one! He smelled a rat somewhere! He didn't show up at Washington and Pierce, not he, he was too smart for that. My belief is he was watching the apartment and saw me go by in the police-car, vanishing while the get-away was good!"

Jasper had told this to Luana, urging her not to worry, that he would soon be caught.

Photographs and descriptions of the escaped convict were all over San Francisco, and it was extremely unlikely that he would be able to get out of the city.

Luana tried not to think about it now, tried to put her mind on the forthcoming opening of her dress-making establishment.

Jimmy Randolph would soon be home. She would have Jimmy's support and encouragement.

She would tell him about Gerald. There was nothing she wouldn't tell him about her past.

"I was a fool not to confide in him, but he'll forgive me." Love would bridge everything. Soon they would be married.

The car drew up at a neat little four-story house between Madison and Park Avenue. There were lace-curtains at the windows, and geranium-boxes, and a shiny brass knocker on the newly-painted green door.

Mr. Vandaveer himself opened the front door to her, greeting her kindly.

She stepped into a small hallway and through open glass doors looked into a gray-carpeted salon that had spindle-legged golden chairs and small couches dotted about it.

"How do you like it, Luana? Our new business premises."

She breathed: "I'm—dazzled!"

"As the bank was forced to foreclose the mortgage, I got this property cheap. For a song, really. Later, we can pull the old house down and build a really nice store. The location is excellent, and some day will be worth a lot of money."

"I'm delighted. I love the carpet. The furniture's lovely."

From the salon, they went up to the second, third, and fourth floors. The fourth was the workroom. Tables and chairs and fixtures were all in. "Tomorrow the girls can come over and get settled, but I wanted you to see it first," he told her.

She thanked him. She was enthusiastic.

A small stair led upward from the workroom. "Come this way, Luana."

He unlocked the door at the top, and she found herself in the foyer of a charming little roof-apartment.

"This is where you'll live. I've had the penthouse fixed for you."

She hadn't known there was a penthouse to the building. It was a charming little place, its main entrance being from the roof, and with its own elevator.

The same rich gray carpeting as in the shop was also here. The furniture was simpler, but in excellent taste. There was a studio-living-room, a good kitchen and bathroom, and a roomy bedroom.

"Of course this goes under store expenses, so that I pay

INTRA-MURAL CHAMPIONS DOWNED BY FACULTY FIVE

By Louis Tomlinson

A dollar's worth of entertainment for only a nickel! That was the treat given the high school students yesterday afternoon when the faculty of the school engaged in a comedy riot basketball tilt with the 11-A and defeated the intramural champions by the one-sided score of 37-18.

The score and the winner was subordinate to the playing of the teachers with their pupils. And what's more the game attracted the students who poured out almost 100% in nearly filling the gym to capacity bringing the attendance up to well over 600, perhaps a conservative figure, but it proved that the undergraduates were really behind the exhibition.

The only way one could really appreciate the full value of such a game is to witness it himself as mere words would be too hard to describe it. Of course Mr. Utz had the leading comedy role as he practically rolled up and down the court chasing the ball, tossing it from one end of the floor to the other, shooting from all angles, and sticking one shot from near the middle of the floor. Whenever the physics instructor surrounded one of the 11A boys you could be sure that the latter had no chance whatsoever to pass the ball, hence there was a jump ball. However, Mr. Utz felt he couldn't get up that high so elected to stay on the floor giving his opponent the tap.

Then there were Mr. Quigley and Mr. Coles who were a close second to Mr. Utz. On one occasion, the musician sent the ball sailing over the top of the backboard from the foul line but later made up for that by sinking a double decker from the same position. The commercial instructor didn't do so bad except that he took several wild shots at the basket but that went for everyone, and at times he missed passes and made several wild heaves, but again everyone else was on the same wagon. However, his technique in getting around the floor in his woolen gym outfit, and the girls became "shocked" when he rolled up his sweat pants to his knees. He also kept the officials on the jump, but his two field goals gave the fans something to cheer about.

As for Mr. Maguire and Mr. Boyd, not much could be said except that both played about a par game with the aforementioned group. Joe hit the cords for a twin-pointer in the final canto for his two points, but Mr. Boyd couldn't quite break into the scoring column, but credit is due him for his good playing despite his handicap. The history instructor had only one shot and that was a bit wide of the net.

Without a doubt the big, tall, dark center for the faculty stood out as the fans' hero of the game. Who was that? None other than Mr. Bruce Gillard, the Penn State alumnus, who rolled up no less than 19 points for himself by counting 8 field goals and 3 foul shots. In other words he scored over half the winners' points. Without his points the game would have ended 18-18. Bruce dribbled through the Juniors like wading through water and proceeded to rack up field goal after field goal. His height and long legs gave him a tremendous advantage over his opponent who tried to guard him. On one occasion the mathematician took three strides from the white line to sink a double decker below the basket. However, Bruce was not the perfect man of the team as several of his shots as well as passes went wild too, but outside of that he was the outstanding individual on the winners' side.

Finally there stalked the court a short chunky chap in bright red shorts, and that of course was our genial coach, Bill Dougherty, who won his letter at the forward post. Coach was ousted from the fray at the start of the third period for committing too many personals, but he was forgiven and returned to the battle in the end of the same period and played the last quarter also, finally ending up with no less than seven violations. Many times he pulled out his bag of tricks in order to trick the officials into giving him a foul shot, and at one time succeeded to do this very nicely. However, for the most part the referees were up to him and usually "caught" him at the game. Coach scored two field goals for his day's work and would have had more except for mistiming himself on his cut for the basket and generally received the ball too late to do anything about it. His passing on the whole was good, but like the rest made several bad passes, and missed a few "under the net" shots. Whenever he missed an easy shot the old razzberry arose from the stands.

Despite all it was the passing of the Faculty that completely dazed the Juniors, especially in the last half.

Giant Ball Tossers Embark for Summer Climes

when the teachers pulled away from their rivals to win easily.

The Intra-mural kings played well and handled the ball much more smoothly than did their opponents; their shots were better timed and more accurate than the winners, but the difference was that their shots didn't go in as often as did the Faculty's.

The outstanding individual and leading scorer for the losers was the bespectacled Melve Fry who hung up four field and two foul goals for 10 of his team's points. And some of his floor shots were pretty neat shots. Next to him was the tall center, Wesley Berry who had two field goals and one foul shot for 5 points.
